HONGKONG, NOVEMBER 24TH, 1876.

It is believed that the dangers to which the Commission, headed by the Hon. T. G. Grosvenor and now on its way to Yunnan, are exposed have in no way been exaggerated. A Router's telegram just received states that a traveller from that province reports having met the Commission and warned them that large bodies of troops were there, ready to resist the investigation. If this information be correct—and it sounds plausible enough—the question arises, who is at the head of the refractory troops? It has been stated that Li Si-rat has been disgraced and has escaped. If this report can be relied upon, it is not improbable that that turbulent and active commander has rallied his forces and determined to resist the investigation. We have always foreseen difficulties in the way of any such inquiry in Yunnan, where the guilty parties are the chief officials and yield only a very limited obedience to Peking. It is probable the Chinese Government were well aware of what would happen in the event of their attempting to hold an investigation near the scene of the outrage; but they doubtless judged it both politic and expedient to allow it to proceed, in order to convince the British Government of the powerlessness of China to carry out the demand for the punishment of the authors of the attack on Colonel Brown's party and the atrocious assassination of Mr. Margary and his attendants. It is to be hoped that the Hon. T. G. Grosvenor will not persevere in his journey if it becomes apparent to him that the Commission may be placed in jeopardy of their lives by proceeding. If Li Si-rat is really in revolt, as appears probable, matters will be considerably complicated. All that will then remain to be done will be for the British Government to dispatch a force from India to reduce the insurgents to submission and punish the perpetrators of the Manaywa tragedy, charging the cost of such expedition to China. Perhaps this would have been the best thing to have done at first; it would certainly have been the most prompt and effective means of gaining satisfaction for the outrage. At all events, it grows more and more evident that the Peking Government is unable at present, as well as unwilling, to execute justice on the Yunnan criminals. Further intelligence of the progress and movements of the Commission will be anxiously looked for.

That question of peace or war between Japan and Corea has not yet, it seems, been fully decided. The political situation is still very grave. The Government is without doubt inclined to maintain a peaceful policy, and will do so if possible. Should it, however, through the action of the Samurai, be compelled to choose between a general and very formidable rebellion and a war with Corea, it will doubtless adopt the latter as the least evil of the two. But this alternative will be embraced only from sheer compulsion, though it cannot be denied that it might appear to possess some advantages. For instance, there is no question that it would ally a great deal of excited national feeling, and increase the popularity of the Government amongst the classes from whom it must always expect the most trouble. It will not be by any means the first Government which has been driven into a foreign war in order to escape domestic broils. On the other hand, the condition of the national finances is not such as would render a foreign war at all acceptable. The Government would be obliged to contract another foreign loan, which, as the money would be spent unprofitably, would remain a dead weight upon the country, and great difficulty be experienced in paying it off. Even if the expedition proved equally victorious and succeeded in conquering and annexing Corea to the Mikado's dominions, the gain would not prove much immediate advantage to Japan. This is reckoning, too, on the non-intervention of China—a matter of great uncertainty. Corea would not, it is to be feared, ever be a wealthy-giving acquisition, and it might entail great expense in keeping the natives in subjection. These considerations have in all probability been carefully weighed by the Japanese Government, which, so far, has shown a good deal of sagacity and moderation in dealing with the question. It continues to display the same ability and firmness, there is every reason to hope that it will triumph over the opposition of the war party and preserve to the country the blessings of peace, during which its wealth may be promoted by a largely extended trade with foreign countries and the development of new industries. The well-wishers of Japan will all be delighted to hear that the crisis has been successfully tide over, and that hostilities with barbarous and exclusive Corea have been avoided.

A Java paper says, referring to the rice crops in that country: "In several parts of Java the price of rice is rising, in some places soaring to a high level. The Government will have to afford assistance to the population not only by providing them with work, but also by importing rice into places where a want of that article exists."

A fire broke out last evening at 8 p.m., at a small and cheap shop in the Western market, opposite the Harbour Master's Office. The fire bell was rung on No. 5 Police Station, shortly after which the Hon. C. May, Mr. Moland, two steam fire-engines, and a hand-engine belonging to the Government, hurried to the spot. The fire was put out by the steam engines. This was the third time a fire has broken out in this house, and the one next door within two years.

An addition has, the Madras Athenaeum informs us, just been made to the collection of the library in the shape of the Locustine Islands, which have been sequestered by the Madras Government, from the Sultan Ali, Raja of Kannanur, owing to his non-payment of the tribute for the year past. The islands have hitherto been under the uncontrolled management of the Sultan, subject to annual payment of Rs. 10,000 as tribute to Government. But the Government has now decided to annex to something like Rs. 60,000, and as there is poor chance of the arrears being made good, Government have ordered the attachment of the islands. A sub-collector and his staff are to proceed to the islands, and the Raja is immediately to take up the administration of the islands. The Raja, however, intends to appeal against the attachment.
